Surgical Shortages Worsen

In an era of healthcare reform, the demand for physicians is increasing, exacerbated by an aging Baby Boomer population and an influx of millions of newly insured patients entering the healthcare market as a result of Medicaid expansion and the health insurance exchanges. The first installment in this three part series on physician shortages discussed the continuing primary care shortage in the United States, due to an aging physician population; a bottleneck in the number of U.S. residency slots; and, fewer residents entering the primary care field. Similar to primary care statistics, surgical specialties are experiencing critical shortages. Despite efforts through research institutes and the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) to address the surgical shortage problem, studies suggest that this trend will continue.

Surgeon supply increased 53 percent from 1981 to 2006, due in part to the rise of surgical subspecialties, but is projected to decrease 18 percent over the next 10 to 15 years,
